The latest degree attainment among young adults (ages 25-34) is even more optimistic at which is three percentage points higher than 2008. If attainment continues to increase at these levels, and once better data on certificate attainment is factored in, Goal 2025 – increasing the percentage of Americans with high-quality degrees and certificates to 60 percent by 2025 – is within reach. Maintaining this level of increase in attainment through 2025 is a significant challenge, however, and requires that the U.S. higher education system be redesigned to focus more effectively on students and learning.

According to Lumina Foundation’s report, A Stronger Nation through Higher Education, 39.4 percent of working-age Americans (ages 25-64) held a two- or four-year college degree in 2012 – the most recent year for which data are available. That figure is up from 2011, when the rate was 38.7 percent, and from 2008, when the rate was 37.9 percent. The 0.7 percent rise from 2011 to 2012 reflects the largest year-over-year increase since 2008.

As the nation’s population becomes increasingly diverse, we must do more to address these troubling attainment divides.”
